

Wilbrahams' River Protection Society Walk

About 20 people, rain-jacketed and booted, set off to do the annual Wilbrahams' River Walk on Sunday afternoon. We were led by Brian Jackson, the Wilbrahams' River Protection Society's chairman, who led us from Hawk Mill Farm, Little Wilbraham, to the Temple at Great Wilbraham, along the course of the river, explaining the history of the river, how the river levels are monitored, and when, and what levels of water extraction take place. The pathways were clear and well mown, and the landscape seen from the edges of the fields and through the copses was lush and delightful, providing a perspective and angle on the villages most of us do not usually have access to.

Many thanks to Brian, and to David White, farmer at Hawk Mill Farm

Photos by Mark Irving and Jeremy Davis

Yellow Flag Irises